

Heaven Bound

Book 1 - Into the Unknown

A Sci-Fi Adventure Thrilling Series

In the year 2455, humanity had conquered the stars. The universe was no longer a place of unknowns—it was a home to countless colonies, each more diverse than the last. Yet, in this expansive cosmos, one question remained unanswered: what lies beyond the reach of time and space?

Jax, a young pilot aboard the starship Eclipse, had always been fascinated by the mysteries of the universe. As a child, he heard stories of a mythical realm known only as Heaven Bound—a place where time no longer mattered, and all who entered would gain the knowledge of the cosmos. Most dismissed it as a legend, but Jax couldn't shake the feeling that it was real.

One fateful night, while exploring an uncharted nebula, the Eclipse stumbled upon an anomaly unlike any other—an energy field that distorted reality itself. Without thinking, Jax navigated the ship through the field, and within moments, everything around him changed. The stars, the planets, and even the ship itself were all warped into a surreal and unfamiliar landscape.

“Where are we?” Jax muttered under his breath, gripping the controls as the ship's lights flickered.

The ship's AI, Athena, responded in a calm but concerned voice. “Jax, this is not a known region of space. The laws of physics are... distorted.”

The view outside the ship's viewport revealed a vast expanse of swirling galaxies, shimmering nebulas, and strange, floating islands. It was beautiful but unsettling. Something about this place felt... ancient.

Suddenly, a voice echoed through the ship, though no one had spoken. It was deep, resonant, and filled with power.

“You have entered the threshold of Heaven Bound.”

Jax’s heart skipped a beat. This was it. The place from the legends.

The voice continued. “You seek knowledge beyond time. But first, you must prove your worth.”

Before Jax could respond, the ship’s systems shut down, and the screen in front of him flickered to black. Panic set in. He was no longer in control.

Then, in a blink, Jax found himself standing on solid ground. The Eclipse was gone. He was in a vast, open space, surrounded by floating stone platforms, each inscribed with symbols that seemed to shift before his eyes. In the distance, he saw a figure cloaked in shimmering light.

It was a woman—tall, with flowing silver hair, and eyes that glowed with a calm intensity. She stepped toward him, her presence both calming and commanding.

“You are ready,” she said. “You seek answers, Jax. But the universe has no simple answers. It only offers more questions.”

Jax swallowed hard. “What is this place? And who are you?”

“I am the Keeper of the Threshold,” she replied. “I guard the gateway to Heaven Bound. You have crossed the boundary, and now you must choose. Will you seek the knowledge of the universe, or will you turn back and live in ignorance?”

Jax stared at her, feeling both a sense of awe and fear. This was more than a journey—it was a test of everything he believed in. The universe had always seemed so vast, so full of possibilities. But now, standing before the Keeper, he realized how little he truly understood.

“You must decide,” the Keeper continued. “The path you choose will shape the fate of the cosmos.”

Jax took a deep breath, looking out across the swirling galaxies and floating platforms. The answers he sought were within his reach, but they came at a cost. The universe had no easy answers, but perhaps that was the greatest truth of all.

With a steady hand, he stepped forward. “I choose to know.”

The Keeper smiled, and with that, the universe seemed to shift. The boundaries of space and time dissolved, and Jax felt his mind expand beyond the stars. He had crossed into Heaven Bound, but the journey had only just begun.
